Empowering Women through Art of Weaving: A Case of Karen The Women

Abstract: Karen women in Myanmar have been weaving for centuries. Weaving is not only a traditional art but also a source of income for them. However, the traditional weaving industry is declining due to the competition from modern textile industries. This study aims to explore the challenges and opportunities of the traditional weaving industry and to propose strategies to empower women through art of weaving. The study was conducted in a village in Myanmar. Data was collected through interviews, focus group discussions, and observations. The findings indicate that the traditional weaving industry is facing several challenges, including the lack of access to modern technology, limited marketing opportunities, and the impact of modern textile industries. However, there are also opportunities to empower women through art of weaving, such as promoting traditional weaving as a cultural heritage, developing eco-friendly weaving products, and providing training and support to women weavers. The study concludes that art of weaving can be a powerful tool for women empowerment and sustainable development in Myanmar. The study also provides recommendations for policymakers, practitioners, and researchers to support the traditional weaving industry and empower women through art of weaving.
